Solidarity among companies in the Corona crisis
ECM-specialist windream supports customers with free licenses for the home office

Bochum. – Free licences for home office solutions - this is what the software company windream GmbH enables its customers in the corona crisis. Since recently, the company has been providing its existing customers with suitable license extensions free of charge. This campaign is an example of how medium-sized companies can support each other in order to master the current challenges.

Spontaneous customer reaction: "Really great!"

"To help so quickly and unbureaucratically in this difficult situation for all of us is really great and we really appreciate it. It's a good feeling to have such a partner on our side. A big thank you from the Weissenburg team." This is how Matthias Kranich, managing director of the Rastatt based weisenburger bau GmbH, expresses himself in the sense of further windream customers. Just like many others, his company is under enormous pressure to keep up business in the face of rapidly changing news. With the components now provided by windream GmbH, employees can work in their home office and thus reduce social contacts in order to comply with the official regulations for containing the risk of infection.

„A friend in need…"

"We are currently receiving many customer enquiries - especially from small and medium-sized enterprises that want to expand their existing software systems. All of them urgently need home office solutions, which usually involves additional license costs per workstation", explains Roger David, CEO of windream GmbH. He now considers all companies to have a macroeconomic responsibility and says: "For us, this is also a question of cooperation. We regard our customers as partners and friends, and we wish them well. We support wherever we can."

„…. is a friend indeed!"

Therefore, windream GmbH will provide all existing customers with the required licenses as an extension for their existing windream systems free of charge for at least three months. The promotion period will be extended until the Robert Koch Institute has again classified the risk of infection as low nationwide. For new customers, windream GmbH also offers liquidity-saving options.
